which is better sounding? A planner or a true ribbon tweeter?I am looking at building my own speakers 3 pair. First pair was a 2 way tower a sea's tweeter and a silverflute mid bass in a bass reflex encloser. I used birch plywood with 13 ply's. My 2nd projectwas a fostex fe 206e drivers in a bass reflex. Talk about wow soundingbut, to much midbass forwardness. Now I am on my 3rd project. I useto have the magnepan mg 12's and loved their sound but, the midbassand bass as many know it was lacking and made a lot of buzzing noiseand rattleing. The bass was on 0 and so was the terble. No loudnessbutton was turnedd on. The company said thar was odd but, I think it the way the speakers were. So now on to my new speaker project. I want a ribbon buy, I am afraid of it sounding to bright and tizzie.I have read a lot about people doing up grades to them. I love theplanners but, I am afraid again not as much detail or aryieness asthe ribbons. I also need a good midrange looking at the accuton drivers very well made and uncolored. I will also need to make a subwoofer that can keep up with my speakers. Please give me advise orany info on kits I can build or buy or you have built or have bought.I listen to blues jazz r&b a little techno ambent and acoustic musicclassical and pop and alturative ans movie's and video games. Thanks jm
