Best bet is to go listen to stereos and find one you like. When listening to speakers, make sure you know how much box volume (space) is behind the speakers you're listening to. If it isn't close to the same volume that will be behind the speakers in your car, they will sound different, particularly in the bass. Most car speakers are made to be used with a fairly large rear volume, like would be expected in the trunk of a car. If you put them in a door, the space is significantly smaller and bass and midrange tends to suffer. So keep that in mind, and try to find speakers that work best in the space they'll be used in.
