Those are goods ones, but don't forget "Oleanna"... a play madeinto a film and all done by Mamet. Oleanna is the closest thing done to a stage play as a dialog that I've seen in a long time. Also not to forget "A Life In The Theatre" w/JackLemmon and Matthew Broderick. I managed to see that as a stageplay and film both. Go you Huskies. But I don't think American films have to be dumbed downfor European audiences, though I know that's not what you are saying. Look at "Amelie" for example. And I just viewed"Monsoon Wedding" last night. It's a shame that rentalplaces feat the loss of vaulable shelf space for additionalcopies of Scooby Doo to stock more foreign films of goodquality. Which remionds me: anybody see "Hero" with Jett Li?
