Just when I was thinking that old fashioned radio might be dead, I hear about Sky.fm. It's not a streaming service (as I first thought) because you don't pick songs or anything. You pick genre or era (as you would pick a station on your radio that played certain types of music) and you listen to what they choose. You can even listen to commercials, if you pick the free version of the app.

It was just announced as a Windows phone app today. It was already on iOS and Android.
