When I bought my first home theater, I started experiencing this after about a week or so. After a long period of trying to understand what the cause was, I decided to switch off the TV after which I unplugged the cable carrying the signal to the TV from the power source, then connected it after about five minutes.

Over the years, I have always used this trick in order to know where the problem lies. In most cases, people assume that it's actually the TV that has a problem, which isn't always the case.
