PC audio is where I started my adventure with speakerbuilding. I was intrigued and still am by direct control of quality speakers from the soundcard. That said, I'm still connected to a receiver amp called the Yamaha RP U100. The Yam has a USB connection which allows control of the unit from the PC via onscreen software from Yamaha. I use audio streaming extensively especially for news. I am not in an area where the Pacifica Network of 300 media outlets has a free air outlet for news broadcasts such as Democracy Now. That's just voice, but I also like to listen to Nevada classical public radio in Wisconsin. With the Winamp media player and its extensive plugins and skins, a set of good powered monitors should be able to connect directly to the PC setup. I think that a PC Sound forum would be well received, but the topics are covered in these other forums especially gainclone and single driver and high end speakers. Here is my favorite spin on PC speakers from the transmissionline forum:
