I've used both in prototypes and they perform just about as well as other drivers with similar specs. For pure MI use they aren't as good as the extended range MI drivers from JBL or EV; they are about as good as Eminence. Of course, that doesn't matter much in two way or better systems. I really like the weight reduction of the SN10 compared to an equivalent traditional driver. The advantages of the SN8 aren't as dramatic, as even by cutting driver weight in half you still only save a few pounds. I'd say where weight is an issue that the 12s and 15s would be very nice, but beware that they aren't super high in power handling. In a horn cab that's more or less moot, but it could be problematic in a less efficient box.
