I've got a pair of Emilar EA-175 1" drivers that have been sitting in my garage forever. There are no diaphragms. One of the drivers looks like the phase plug (If this is the correct term. The concentric rings that I see from the back where the diaphragm goes, looking towards the throat) is crooked. Two questions:1. In good condition, how would these compare to my current drivers (Seleniums)? Worth investing the money to repair them?2. Who repairs these units?Thanks.
