Sorry Earl, but I just don't agree. I like a lot of your ideas, but on this point, maybe we don't agree.Non-uniformity of off-axis response is not generally considered to be a plus. Some live with this defect, but I don't think anyone considers it to be a good thing. The whole point of CD horns is to develop a pattern that is constant with frequency.I do think that gradually narrowing directivity is preferable to having abrupt changes, but I think that uniform directivity is better still.
