Yep, yep. I agree with you. I mean, cabinet tuning and build quality is important. The cabinet must be of proper size and acoustic parameters, and it also must be well-braced and things like that. So these are attributes that are important of the cabinet. But putting that aside, I understood what you meant. It's like race cars don't have to be pretty to win races. I'm into aesthetics too, but I think that's another thing altogether. Forget about psychoacoustics and the fact that some speakers just look like they might perform better. Not talking about that. I just really like having speakers that look like a supermodel and sound like an opera singer.
