I agree, Wayne! Of course, assuming well executed designs, they should all give the same illusion, right? One of total fidelity?SO there may be many paths, but one goal (the illusion of high fidelity).A great push-pull design with great parts & workmanship will obviously beat the pants off a poor ly executed, or ill thought of SET design...and vice versa. The same logic can be extended to any component choice: for example horn loaded drivers versus BR versus sealed box. I tend to view these as means to an end: high fidelity. Often times, the means becoems the end...which is unfortunate. I have seen this in other pursuits as well.People tend to favor one "means" over another. -akhilesh
