Thanks for the warning about using a 1st order crossover with these tweeters. I pulled the stock crossover because it uses very cheap parts (an miniature electrolytic cap and a pencil-thin iron core inductor) and because I want to minimize the interaction between the full range front driver and the ambience supertweeter, which requires a higher crossover frequency. I may try a 2nd order configuration crossed at 10K and see how it sounds. This would make them bullet proof bullets (no pun intended).
