

---

Subject: Re: Best Buy and High End
Posted by lon on Thu, 28 Jul 2005 17:18:25 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Ok, Just mail me then: lon@athenet.net What I get from the mail back system here is the only address I have for you. If you are not webmaster or whatever, then I don't have good address to send you things. Far as the thread goes I don't have much if any contact with high end audiophiles and supply shops. The local one that's left here is pretty much full of the snooty types I'm used to encountering in them. Far as DIY goes for younger people, you prob'ly right. But I think that's a form versus content thing. What's more important: the form or the content? Content comes from cable tv which can be broadcast in stereo, free air and satellite radio and audio streams bring radio. and then there's 'home theatre.' Home theatre with vhs and dvd, cds etc provide for time shifting and on-demand viewing. But it has also meant the balkanization of what was once a theatrical experience. But it's kids who fill up the multiplexes so who's to say what age group is out of sync? lon

---