I prefer front horns to f200a I have been using f200a for 5 years now have much experience Bob picked my brain before building his system. F200a is a wonderful driver and has near full range response. I get 30hz out of cab in link. But it doesn't have the dynamics of front horns doesn't sound as at ease. Doesn't have the image size. But is much cheaper to build due to cab design. I have bass horns and other cabs that have mated great with front horns but you are right it's not easy. But is worth it in the end I have both f200a and front horns plus others in my systems. I have also used f200a in front horns sounds very nice but no treble gets lost in the horn.
