Yeah, I can't get behind that kind of reasoning either. It's like the stone age or something. But regardless, if the product is good and sounds good, it might be an attractive alternative to Fostex and Lowthers. Maybe better cabinets can be made though. I think it would have been good for him to have displayed his products at GPAF. Maybe next year he'll be able to make it. It's only a five hour drive for him, and it would let people hear the products instead of just read about them.
