I'm with you on the digital cameras. I'm sure they'll have great resolution very soon, but right now, they just can't compete. Film granularity is pretty tiny, and is equivalent to several thousand pixels per inch. That's probably ten times the resolution or more than the finest digital cameras today. We have a little digital camera that's fine for taking pictures like a little instamatic would be used for. We can upload 'em and E-Mail 'em easily and right away. But the camera I use most often is a Canon EOS Rebel G with a 28-105mm lense. It's a pretty good camera, and I have several filters so I can do some really cool stuff with it.
