I have not listened to Line array before, from your descriptions I envisage that the soundstage of this type of speaker must be huge due to employment of multiple drivers, and with its increased in efficiency it can be driven by most valve amplifiers except for lowered wattage SET amps. This is another point that makes it attractive to valve amp lovers. My query is that with its use of multiple point sources to create the huge sound stage does it lose out on its musical coherency when compared to a full range driver... Both of you have listened to many speakers from both types any comments. There must be a downside (ie musical output) to Line array speakers besides the price point..
