The weirdness of this problem was the fact that I've always considered that a speaker connection was on or not on--not some dim place in between. So my right side was fading and I thought I was losing my hearing. I finally fixed the problem after the connection (which went through a speaker a/b switch) broke and took out a section of wire and hooked it up direct. I can't understand how such a connection could begin to fade. Can something go bad in a speaker a/b switch? Not much else new.
