Subject: A fun little game
Posted by Wayne Parham on Sun, 07 Mar 2004 11:50:33 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

What do you think 'bout those little Google links at the bottom of each post? I thought they were kinda cool. It doesn't cost anything to click on 'em and investigate the sites, but AudioRoundTable.com gets a penny or two when we click a few. So after about a jillion clickthroughs, it might just help pay the server fees eventually.I think these links are kinda fun, just 'cause sometimes they're relevant and interesting. Then other times, they are not relevant at all to the post that contains them. Seems like it takes a few hours or maybe a day for Google to link in relevant stuff, and until then, it uses generic links instead.This content-sensing makes for a fun game - Try to find the most inappropriate or mis-matched posts. You know, something like a post that discusses "crossovers" and getting a Google link that goes to a site of a political canidate that changed their party or something. 'Specially in this political climate today, what with the marriage controversy and what not. So pay attention to those links at the bottom, and let us know when you see some that are particularly useful or funny.