Yeah, as an example, Tamas Tako is looking for another driver to use because he has had real trouble with his. He has 48 of them, and had considered the new B12 driver before Eminence nixed it. Instead, he and several other people are looking for other options.My original focus was on reducing distortion, but as soon as I mentioned the B12, lots of people asked that it be made to handle more power. So that became a secondary matter, maybe a primary one in many people's minds. I always thought that the LAB12 speaker probably handled 500 watts just fine, and what was killing them was the fact that many people thought a pair of them could be used at much higher levels than that. But whatever the case, people want a higher level of performance.
