The guy at Lowe's suggested I use a low nap mohair roller....boy was he wrong. After applying the first coat I hurried as fast as I could to try and undo the bubbly mess the roller made with a brush. I smoothed it out and scraped off as much excess poly as I could.It turned out better than I expected but still the coat was too thick.How can I fix this? Will over sanding the poly mess up anything for further coats?I am using Minwax fast drying satin.Please help!They sure look good from 2' and camera shots though. :D... but that wont do , I need close inspection good looks to some degree.
