I noticed that the Baltic Birch plywood I got in handy panels (so I could transport them) wound up with a significant amount of voids after cutting. I thought this stuff was supposed to be void-free. What's the deal? My little whiskey box style nearfields using Tangband w3-871Ses are finally together. I don't have a lot good to say about how the butt joints turned out either. But there was a lot of stuff to learn on a first project. I guess you could call these the 'rustic' look. Oh yeah.:o)
