
Subject: Less than 10% is "right on the money"

Posted by Wayne_Parham on Tue, 31 Jul 2001 19:48:52 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

You're right, this system is pretty insensitive to component shifts. I've designed it that way on purpose, because the electro-mechanical properties of the drivers shift, so we need some "wiggle room" for everything to work properly when you put the power to them. Components with 10% tolerance are fine, less than that is right on the money.
