What a great concept! An audio site providing MUSIC. I love the play list too - broad and eclectic in scope. Great fun.But, and I hate to say it, the delivery has a bad case of the hiccups. Sometimes they're so small there isn't an audible break but the rhythm of the music becomes disjointed. Actual drop outs are frequent enough that after an hour I had to retreat to my iTunes over wireless network Audio Note and Red Wine Audio office system. I listen to music and streaming talk radio over the 'net all day, so I don't think it's my connection . . .How do you deal with copyright issues and the like? The reason I ask is because I'm doing a community choir web site and we want to put up at least pieces of their concerts for people to listen to and we're worried about rights issues biting us. It's still in development and doesn't have any sound yet, but for the curious, I've included a link below.
