As suggested, you should audition to be sure. However, you are pretty spot on to what I heard with my maggies. While they could be extraordinary and had one of the best 'sweet spot' listening experiences for me, I went back to my horn roots. There were a couple of reasons for me - First, as picky as horns can be regarding electronic matches, the MAGgies were more so. I piddle with too many things and horns give me a bit more freedom. Second, they had such a small sweet spot in my set up (and really changed dramatically when I put my ear above the panel). Horns were much more room 'filling'. That said - If I had a room that I tuned for one chair I might have to give my vote to the Maggies. All is IMHO
