Subject: Re: DUI Laws
Posted by DickC on Tue, 27 Jan 2004 21:46:11 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

You're forgetting something Wayne. Alchohol is a depressant, not a stimulant. Studies have proved time and again, that even after one drink peoples reflexes noticeably slow down. The more drinks an individual has, the more his reflexes and judgement deteriorate. So even if someone has not reached the blood alchohol level of .08, his driving skills and judgement are not what they should be, even if he has only two beers. IMO anyone who drinks two beers and gets behind the wheel, is rolling the dice with his life and the lives of others. Dick