

---

Subject: Not too mention...

Posted by Mr Vinyl on Fri, 03 Mar 2006 20:43:12 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

That the more severely the child is diagnosed the more money the school gets. So it is beneficial for the school to claim the child is very severe and can't be handled in a regular class. Not to mention that to put an autistic child in a regular class usually means he will need an aide of some kind to help him. This of course would cost more money for the school. Hmm which one do you think they would pick?

---