The interesting part about Brad Ellis' Less Than Zero wasthat the library copy I had (I buy very little) was really wellworn. It and the movie are watched read by kids... they use the movie as a party film. I have less idea about the current listof kid films.Strangely I cannot remember the most horrific scene of Less Than Zero (the book) being duplicated in the film.But there is a similar scene in Spun. And it got to methe same way the book did. There is a strange use of videogame animation in 2 of these: Spun and Bully. I have askedbut never found out if these are actual video game animationsor created for the films. One can dismiss this sort of thing saying "It's none of my business" or maybe more to the point being told "It's none of _your_ business"but then these images are only being absorbed by the kids themselvesat house parties and on dvd/vhs.Before you ask, I don't believe in any sort of censorship forthose of adult age.
