Those are goods ones, but don't forget "Oleanna"... a play made into a film and all done by Mamet. Oleanna is the closest thing done to a stage play as a dialog that I've seen in a long time. Also not to forget "A Life In The Theatre" w/Jack Lemmon and Matthew Broderick. I managed to see that as a stage play and film both. Go you Huskies. But I don't think American films have to be dumbed down for European audiences, though I know that's not what you are saying. Look at "Amelie" for example. And I just viewed "Monsoon Wedding" last night. It's a shame that rental places feat the loss of vaulable shelf space for additional copies of Scooby Doo to stock more foreign films of good quality. Which remionds me: anybody see "Hero" with Jett Li?
