But.This philosophy also prevents me from worrying about the afterlife. If there is one, great. My job is to worry about how I'm living right now.but to live now affects what happens later.What if the bible beleiving people are correct, assuming it is true, that one must respect what it says, when it concerns the judgment,and our actions and what we chose to commit our lives to.hypotheticalyAssuming the bible is true then surely we must follow what it says?this is the dungeon ,not for philosophy and theology :PCan i honestly say that i beleive the bible because it seems logical ? i dont think one can apply 'logic' but i really mean it 'makes sense to me'Cheers!
