Could be that people are at the Denver show. Or it could just be that it's Friday and people are getting their work done and preparing for the weekend.Check this out - Yesterday, it was about 80o in the AM so even though we were supposed to get some rain, I did a lot of errands on my motorcycle. I knew that if it rained, it was warm enough it wouldn't be too bad. Just be cool with the new rain slick spots.So finally it starts raining, and it's that warm thick rain that soaks you and makes you feel like you're swimming. Kinda funny. So after a while, it stops and I think I'll probably get dry from the rest of the ride. I even went inside for awhile and could have changed vehicles to take the car for my next round of errands. But it became nice outside and I thought probably the ride would dry that last little bit of damp out of me. Could have changed into dry clothes or could have taken the car. But I figured I'd ride again.As soon as I got back out on the road, it burst into heavy rain that made standing water high enough to stall a dozen cars or so around town. I guess it was just my day to get wet.
