Well; thats what the productivity increase does; less people more output. The figures for this year alone are up .9%, pretty amazing considering. Remmember when 401k's first came out? Every co. offered matching funds and it looked like a great deal, soon the matching funds disappeared from the landscape. Next people said well, it's a tax write off at least; except now for the Alternative Minimum Tax rule, which basically nullified that benefit. So this wonderfull program of personal investments now equals a low paying savings account. What do you think will happen with the new plan? Same thing. When big business wants something; you can bet it ain't for your benefit.
