And if the costume guidelines reflecting 1960's stylewere to continue into the Next Generation and have elements of our current age, the female crew mmbers would havehip huggers and bare midriffs. I actually think a lot more care is taken with the newerseries. It's less broad and not as much scenery chewing. The features films, with notable exceptions, have beengetting better in that there is less 'fan service' (a termused in anime quite a bit) and more story. If the plot lines were written then as they are now, the Borg collective would be a reference to Communism I suppose. I stopped watching tv after the first episode of ST-V, not because I didn't like Voyager, I had just had it with commercial televison. I never went back. But now I can watch the content without the advertising.
