I defintely understand the technical disagreements. Even between two engineers that are fairly close in design styles, there can be serious differences in implementation strategies. So that's where you each can stand out.I would be really impressed to see you create a brand name, maybe Magnetone or something like that. Or maybe that's too close to Mike's name, just throwing something out there. Have custom winds made that are possibly compatible with early popular transformers, but superior. That part you already have down pat. Build brand recognition by using your iron in excellent amps and take 'em to shows. I think that would be excellent. People sure have responded favorably to your amp designs, and I think having your own transformers wound sets you apart and ahead. Sure could be coooool.
