
Subject: Why lawyers?

Posted by colinhester on Sat, 01 Oct 2005 00:05:23 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

When my children turn 18, I consider them adults. I will have had 18 years to teach them right from wrong and that there are consequences to every choice they make. They will make many decisions during their lives, and they will deal with the consequences. This is called being an adult. When I fucked up, my dad did not run out and hire an attorney. He made me live with that choice. If the kid is an asshole, then maybe a little discipline will be good for him. The recruiter has nothing more to do with that young man. Just curious. What defense is the attorney going to take on getting this kid out, assuming he wants out? I had two opportunities to enlist. Both times I thought better of it. The second time I knew the service was not for me; the recruiter didn't think it was funny when I was started singing "Alice's Restaurant." Here's an idea: maybe Cindy can take up his cause. By the way, why didn't Senator Clinton meet with Cindy? O, O, O, O, Mista Kotter, I know.....
