Why do you take it as a personal attack? Maybe a little blunt; but blunt is good it shows you respect the other guy and choose not to waste his time if you are not serious. It's not a personal attack. Calling someone clueless; that's an example of a personal attack. Since I am unknown and far away a personal attack hiding behind a monicker would be cowardly. Not my style. I like to discuss politics in the context of everyday life; that's all it means. So; where were we? Legislating from the bench, right?
