Speaking of exquisitely recorded, Benjamin Britton's The Turn of the Screw (Naxos) has some of the truest sounding classical vocal rendition that I know of. Better than the London's, DG's, and whatnots that I have. Warning . . this is contemporary classical music. Kind of dear to me as I happened to catch the premier in London on a two week stay tho I confess that I was, at the time, anxious for intermission so I could slug down a couple of whiskeys (which I did). It's in English, BTW.

Thanks, Marlboro, keep em coming.
