Thanks for the reply. I'm not noticing any differences in balance so far.

My problem is that my left ear is not as strong as my right (typical for most people that drive on the right side of the road as is the inverse being true)and I typically have a difficult time getting the balance right on the vocals. The higher vocal harmonic is always a bit louder in my right ear when everything else like the kick, snare and bass guitars are down the middle where they should be. I can typically get the vocals down the center if I don't mind guitars being a little stronger on the left. It is a real compromise.

I have never had any of this sort of problem on speakers since slightly moving my head and the crosstalk will correct any tonal imbalance. It is always with headphones.
