

---

Subject: Re: Effect of Length

Posted by Lancelot on Mon, 02 Aug 2010 07:34:04 GMT

View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

---

Keith Larson wrote on Sun, 01 August 2010 22:57: Incidentally when something sounds bad, what I usually find to be most problematic are bad connections, oxidation and corrosion. Basically this is loose screws, oxidized wire and incompatible metal contacts.

Does this mean that a wire subjected to environmental variables like rain or wind can change the volume or sound quality that run through it? I thought the cords are protected from these elements.

---