I have such a spaghetti nest of wiring and black boxes onthe dvd and stereo stuff I'm afraid to take it apart.But one thing I've noticed: the dialog played throughthe dvd to a noise suppression box (midnight theater)and into a Yamaha RP U100 receiver then out to myMLTL speaks seems to get lost in a cascade of 'moodmusic' which is part of the, inthis case, tv show calledStar Trek Enterprise.I have turned off the DSP effects on the Yam and am using\the 10/1 setting on the noise supression box. The box keeps volumesnormalized so as not to freak out my neighbors. Hence the term midnight theater which is no incorporated into hometheater 5:1 amps as a feature.How would plugging the dvd player directly into the Yamchange things? or is it just a poor recording job byParamount to get those surround sound and dolby effects?Maybe this should be in Home Theater (?)
