But don't get upset when new technologies come that make your equipment passe. That's how things are when it comes to gadgets. For as long as your equipment keeps on reading Bluray discs, be happy with that. Then wait for another two to three years down the line to upgrade again.

Thanks all for the replies. I think this is a good point, Whatever I buy now should still be able to play Bluray discs even when new ideas emerge. I suppose for people of a certain age the VHS - Betamax situation still looms large. I dread getting stuck with something that is pretty near useless within a year.
