Hi...This will probably sound strange but try and stay with me....WE are currently arguing about speaker placement in our hall...(note - none of us has any official training / expertise)

The "experts" are adamant that the speakers should be placed at the front of the stage to eliminate any feedback problems from microphones on stageI know this makes sense....The problem is the speakers block the view of the stage and look out of place.

The users of the sound system believe the speakers are better placed at the rear of the stage...I know this sounds wrong....however the speakers look neater, the sound is clearer, AND can be pushed louder before feedback occurs than if they are placed at the front of the stage.

Is there any reason the speakers cannot be placed at the rear of the stage???? Everything seems to work better if they are placed here.
