Can't do it. The port would be too close to the rear panel.

Beyond that, I don't suggest deviating from the plans unless you are prepared to do a lot of measurements and go through a full design/test cycle. Some modifications can be done with little impact but most can't. Changing the cabinet dimensions change the way standing waves line up in the cabinet and can introduce peaks and dips in the upper midbass and lower midrange. So my suggestion would be to stick with the plans.
