Oh, yes, please do. We don't want to dilute diyaudioprojects.com as I see them as a sort of sister site to AudioRoundTable.com. I always have, ever since they went live in 2006 or so. In fact, if we hadn't already established a "Group Build" and Projects directory a few years earlier, we probably would have used their site for that feature instead.

Don't think that just because your company support forum is here, that precludes you from participating in the open forums too. Feel free to become involved in group DIY projects and to engage in the discussions in the open, non-commercial forums. Just because a person cannot promote their products in the open forums doesn't mean they cannot promote their ideas there. That's really the most important part, the sharing, discussing even dissecting of ideas.