Hi Wayne,

I've recently placed my 4 pis in the corners a couple of inches away from the adj. walls and love the sound I'm getting. Very coherent with good balance from top to bottom within the limits of the design (i.e. quite good). The bass is strong and extended- better than before with the placement away from the corners. The only problem I can detect with just my ears is a bit of lack of highs; mind you I have 61 year old ears! I've pulled out a pair of the old Fostex imitation super tweeters from Radio Shack and for the most part like what they do to boost the highs. Whether I keep them in the system remains to be seen since before with my Theater 4s I found them to, ultimately, not blend well enough.

My question is: do you have any tricks up your sleeve with properly placing and limiting electrically such a tweeter similarly to your suggestions on integrating multiple subs?

Thanks!
Garland
