Subject: Re: JBL 2226H question: is this right?
Posted by Wayne Parham on Wed, 28 Dec 2011 22:47:58 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

Compression drivers need no break-in. Some people feel they change over time, and I suppose that may be true, but the traditional suspension break-in isn't really an issue because excursion is so small.

Your silicon may be fully cured by now. It has been over a week. I usually like to see them cure for ten days to two weeks but that's being cautious.

The best way to know when the silicon has cured enough is by smell. If you can smell the silicon, then it is still out-gassing. Wait to install everything until the silicon has no smell.