Well, there you go. I understand completely. That's the only problem with the cornerhorns, they're only for people that have the right corners and will leave them there. That's what we make the matched-directivity two-ways and flanking subs. They're the next best thing, a close second, and they can be placed pretty much anywhere. But do think about your subwoofer installation and try to find a solution that satisfies both your placement concerns and the modal situation.
