Like many of the posts above said, even though it looks hard to wire a home entertainment system, it really isn't, because everything is color-coded. However, if your hubby just can't get it, there are some websites out there that can help. I found one called "wirewize", which states that it offers "How to Connect" guides for home electronics. I don't know if the information is free or not, but if it helps, it might be worth it!
