Oops, sorry Wayne. I don't want to upset you ! Agreed, it's beauty comes from form following function. In my opinion, the great strength of your cornerhorn design is it's flexibility to accommodate change. I am sure it will continue to develop as the years roll on.
However, I hope you will agree that beauty is always in the eye of the beholder. This request is being driven by the female element within the household and must be taken seriously even if I eventually build it stock after negotiation. Any alteration I make, may of course back fire and reduce performance in my example or render it less able to accommodate future improvement.
I assume the wings I suggested for the bass box front panel don't cause you much excitement as you didn't mention them.
Anybody out there have the temerity to suggest cosmetic changes now ?!
