Oh, heavens, you didn't upset or offend.

I'm just sayin'...

I'll bet if she were at a show and saw my pair of cornerhorns, she'd think they looked great. Women tend to like them even more than men. But they have to actually see and hear them to fall in love with them, I suppose.

When women come into a relationship with a man that already has cornerhorns, they never want any other kind of speaker from then on. I've seen it on several occasions. I guess I never really thought about how maybe they wouldn't have picked the speaker in the first place, but once they live with it, they love it. Maybe that's it.

I always figured it was because they are tucked back into the corners, out of the way of room furnishings and decor. But women also have really good hearing so maybe that's part of it.
